The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol — (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

PARADISE LOST

BOOK I

BY JOHN MILTON

EDITED
WITH LIFE, INTRODUCTION, NOTES, &c.

BY
F. GORSE, M.A.
SECOND MASTER, PARMITER'S FOUNDATION SCHOOL, LONDON

TORONTO
PREFATORY NOTE.

This edition aims at being a practical school book, providing all that is likely to be required by pupils in school, and at the same time free from the detail which can only usefully find a place in a book intended for more advanced students. Etymological matter has been but sparingly introduced, and the custom of quoting parallel passages from the ancient classics, so useful to the mature scholar but so bewildering to the young pupil, has been all but given up.

INTRODUCTION.

LIFE OF MILTON.

After Shakespeare, Milton is usually acknowledged to be the greatest English poet; yet he is not generally thought of as a national poet—as a representative of English character, in nearly the same degree as Shakespeare. He was closely connected with a party—the Puritans; and his eager partisanship undoubtedly had a narrowing effect upon him, and upon his later poetry. But was Milton a Puritan? He lived at a time when every man felt bound to take his stand with one of two parties: either with a king who was exercising despotic power in religious and civil matters; or with those who held that the king was bound to rule lawfully for the common good, and that in religion reasonable freedom should be allowed—whose motto was 'fair play' for everyone, even from kings. These principles Milton held as firmly as any man; to this extent he was one of the most earnest of Puritans. But it seems to be the very irony of fate, that he who took so keen a part in the struggle for freedom—freedom in religion, freedom from kingly tyranny, and freedom to think for one's self—now the most envied and the most cherished possessions of Englishmen, should not be more generally remembered and honoured as a great patriot. That he was not even a greater poet than he was, is due to the unhappy times in which he lived, and to the fact that, much as he loved poetry, he loved his country more.

The Milton family appear to have been distinguished by their strong convictions, and by their courage in acting upon them. The poet's grandfather is said to have been a staunch Catholic in the days of Elizabeth, and to have been heavily fined as a recusant—that is, for refusing to attend the services at the parish church. His son, the poet's father, on the other hand, became a Protestant, and was in consequence disin-heirloom. He settled in London as a scrivener, and prospered, and there the poet was born in 1608. His education was carried on at home by various masters, and by his father, who taught him to sing and to play the organ, and implanted in him his own love of music. Although his home was a cheerful and happy place, he seems to have been an unusually quiet, serious child, and prematurely studious, if we may judge from some lines placed by the engraver under a portrait of him, made when he was ten years old:

"When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing: all my mind was set
Serious to learn and know, and thence to do
What might be public good; myself I thought
Born to that end, born to promote all truth,
All righteous things".  (Paradise Regained.)

At twelve he was sent to St. Paul's School, quite near his home in the city of London, and he still had tutors at home. He now worked very hard indeed for several years; no trouble or expense was grudged by his parents; for they were very proud of him, and had formed the highest hopes as to his future. In 1625, when in his seventeenth year, he entered Christ's College, Cambridge, and remained there till he was twenty-three.

Here came a break in his education, and with it the question, What was he going to do in life? His parents had destined him for the church; but the system of government by bishops and the tyranny of Laud deterred him from entering the ministry. His father seems to have left him free to choose a calling for himself, and so we find him, about the

1 The business of a scrivener in London consisted in the drawing up of wills, marriage settlements, and other deeds, the lending out of money for clients, and much else now done partly by attorneys, and partly by law-stationers.

2 "My father destined me, while yet a little boy, for the study of humane letters, which I seized with such eagerness that from the twelfth year of my age I scarce ever went from my lessons to bed before midnight, which indeed was the first cause of injury to my eyes, to whose natural weakness there were also added frequent headaches."

3 The elder Milton was himself a very well-educated man, and showed throughout the most generous sympathy and appreciation. The poet gratefully acknowledges this in his Latin poem Ad Patrem,—and hopes that other fathers may imitate him.
time of his leaving college, finally determined to fit himself, by continued labour and study, and by a strictly pure and blameless life, to achieve some great work as a poet. Accordingly he now settled at Horton, a quiet hamlet in Buckinghamshire, within a short distance of Windsor and the Thames, in the house of his father, who had retired thither to spend his old age.

Of the poems which he had already written the chief was The Nativity Hymn, begun on Christmas-day, 1629. His sonnet On Arriving at his 23rd Year is of special interest at this point:

"How soon hath Time, this subtle thief of youth,
Stolen on his wing my three-and-twentieth year!
My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom shew’th.
Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth
That I to manhood am arrived so near;
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
Than some more timely-happy spirits endu’th.
Yet, let it less or more, or soon or slow,
It shall be still in strictest measure even
To that same lot, however mean or high,
Toward which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven;
All is, if I have grace to use it so,
As ever in my great Task-Master’s eye."

He seems to have devoted himself to an extensive course of ‘select reading’, especially to a revision of classical and Italian literature, storing his mind with all that was best worth appropriating, and becoming almost as familiar with Latin, Greek, and Italian as with his native tongue. He did not write more than five English poems of any great length during this period—L’Allegro, Il Penseroso, Arcades, Comus, and Lycidas—but they are amongst the very best in the language: and yet, in the last and the best of them, he is still dissatisfied with his powers. In the spring of 1637 he had lost his mother; next spring he started off to see Italy and Greece, which for him would be exceptionally interesting. But the tyranny of Charles had at last provoked his subjects in Scotland to rebellion. On hearing of this in South Italy,
Milton at once resolved to return and take his part with his countrymen in the impending contest.① In 1629 he was back. He took a house in London, and settled there for the rest of his life.②

So far Milton's life had been one of quiet, secluded study. For the next twenty years poetry was banished, study and self-preparation were all but given up, and he was to be found in the very thick of the controversies of the day,—writing against Episcopacy, defending the Execution of Charles (in two books—the First and the Second Defence), and exposing the notorious Eikon Basilike. He had, on settling in London, begun to take a few pupils; this led him to write an essay on Education. Yet his only great and enduring work in prose was his Areopagitica, a plea for freedom of opinion, and for freedom to express that opinion to all the world by means of the printing-press, without the previous sanction of the Licenser. His activity in the Parliamentary cause had led to his being appointed, in 1649, Latin Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs, a post for which his knowledge of foreign languages specially qualified him. It was during his tenure of this office that he deliberately hastened his blindness, which had been coming on for some years, over the writing of the First Defence, mentioned above.③

It is evident that this must have been, in his case, a terrible calamity, for he had not yet even begun his great poem. The truly admirable way in which he bore it is shown by the courage and patience which characterised his subsequent life,

① "I considered it," he says, "dishonourable to be enjoying myself at my ease in foreign lands, while my countrymen were striking a blow for freedom."

"I perceived that, if I ever wished to be of use, I ought at least not to be wanting to my country, to the church, and to so many of my fellow-Christians, in a crisis of so much danger; I therefore determined to relinquish the other pursuits in which I was engaged, and to transfer the whole force of my talents and my industry to this important object."

② Except during the plague in 1665-6, when he retired to Chalfont St. Giles, a village in Buckinghamshire, about 10 miles from Horton.

③ "In such a case I could not listen to the physician, not if Æsculapius himself had spoken from his sanctuary; I could not but obey that inward monitor, I know not what, that spoke to me from Heaven... I concluded to employ the little remaining eyesight I was to enjoy in doing this, the greatest service to the common weal it was in my power to render." (Second Defence.)

and by the various references to it which we find in his writings.

But there were other misfortunes in store for him: in 1660
the Parliamentary cause failed completely—for the time; Milton was imprisoned, some of his prose writings were burnt by the hangman, and he lost most of his savings. He had indeed "fallen on evil days", and yet he bravely took up and carried to completion the great work of his life—his epic poem, Paradise Lost. He had begun it before the Restoration, probably in 1658; he finished it about 1663, spent two years or so on its revision, and published it in 1667.
Meanwhile he had commenced its sequel, Paradise Regained; then he wrote Samson Agonistes, a dramatic poem, and several prose works.

His latter years were greatly cheered and brightened by the fame which Paradise Lost brought him, and by the frank recognition of his pre-eminence by all parties.

He died in London in 1674, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate.

Three qualities stand out conspicuously in Milton's character. First, his deep sense of duty. He seems never to falter in his entire devotion to that which he believes he ought to do at any particular juncture. Two striking instances of this are, the return from Italy in 1639, and the employment of

To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot;
Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
Of man, or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer
Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied
In Liberty's defence, my noble task,
Of which all Europe rings from side to side.
This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask
Content, though blind, had I no better guide.

3 Dryden, the Royalist poet, admired Milton greatly, and with his leave adapted Paradise Lost for dramatic performance!
his failing eyesight in writing the Defence. Second, the sincerity and the earnestness of his religious and political convictions. Third, his magnanimity and patience. Twenty years spent in a cause that, for the time, failed; loss of eyesight; loss of savings; loss of friends; the restoration of a dissolute monarch: all this produced neither bitterness nor murmur. “Who best bear His mild yoke, they serve Him best.” So he wrote and so he lived. Truly, as Macaulay says, he was weighed in the balance, and not found wanting.

The present work is a translation of the Latin text, and is the result of a study that has been long in preparation and not less striking in its consequences. It is not the business of a translator to make the language of the original into the language of the translator, but to render what is there into what is here, and so with the utmost respect both for the text and for the translator. The present translator has endeavored to preserve in its whole substance and spirit the spirit and letter of the original.

THE SUBJECT OF PARADISE LOST.

The subject of the poem as given in Book I. is the temptation and fall of man, that is, his deterioration from the state of perfect goodness and happiness, in which he was supposed to have been created, to one made up of good and evil, of happiness and unhappiness; this 'fall' being symbolised by the expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise or Eden. This is the central fact of the story; to it all the rest (Books I.–VIII.) is preparatory, and with it the story ends. But the preparatory events are so stupendous in their magnitude, so striking in their character, and described in such impressive language—forming, as they do, the best part of the poem—that they tend to overshadow the doings in the Garden; and so we come to look upon Paradise Lost as dealing rather with a series of connected events, of which the 'fall' is the first in importance but not in interest. We may, therefore, regard Paradise Lost as dealing with the whole universe, in its widest possible aspect; with the origin of its various parts, and their significance for man.

ANALYSIS OF THE POEM.

(A) The Fall: why and how it was brought about. I.–VIII.
(B) Its results. IX.–XII.
(C) Man's relation to the Universe and to God. Part of V. (The third point, though not prominent, is very important in the scheme of the poem.)
(A) The Fall: why and how it was brought about:
(1) Heaven; the War:
   (a) Its Cause, the refusal of Satan and his followers to acknowledge the Son as their head. V.
   (b) The War, the expulsion of the rebels. VI.
(2) The Creation of the World and of Man. VII., VIII.
(3) Hell:
   (a) The rebels closed in and stunned by their fall; Satan rallies his followers. I.
   (b) The leaders in Council: Satan undertakes to try to ruin Man. II.
   (c) Hell and Chaos described.
   (d) Satan’s journey through Chaos.
(4) The World; Eden:
   (a) Satan explores the World. III.
   (b) Adam and Eve in Eden; Satan’s plottings; Raphael’s warnings. IV. and V.
   (c) The Fall effected. IX.

(B) The Results of the Fall:
(1) Punishment pronounced on Tempter and Tempted by the Son. X.
(2) Sin and Death take possession of the World, but their overthrow by the Son (i.e. the Redemption) is foretold. X.
(3) Michael reveals the future to Adam, reassures him of Redemption, and leads him and Eve out of Paradise. XI. and XII.

(C) Man’s Relations to the Universe and to God, as set forth by Raphael in Book V. 469-543, may be summed up briefly thus:
“One Almighty is”; all things are created by Him, from “one first matter all”; all things are perfect in their various degrees, but are more refined and spiritual in proportion as they are near Him. In nature “the grosser feeds the purer”, the soil is transformed, through the plant, into flower and fruit; the latter, used as man’s nourishment, is “sublimed” into the living force which sustains the mind and the soul:

(M 46)
thus there is complete continuity from the lowest forms (i.e. mere matter) to the highest (i.e. pure spirit); and “all things . . . up to Him return, if not depraved from good”. Raphael concludes:

“Time may come when men
With Angels may participate, and find
No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare;
And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improved by tract of time, and winged ascend
Ethereal, as we; or may at choice
Here or in heavenly Paradises dwell,
If ye be found obedient”.

With this compare VII. 155, where the Almighty states His purpose in creating Man, viz. to replenish Heaven, lest Satan should boast of the damage inflicted: He will, He says, create

“Of one man a race
Of men innumerable, there to dwell,
Not here, till, by degrees of merit raised,
They open to themselves at length the way,
Up hither, under long obedience tried”, &c.

In this analysis the topics are arranged in chronological order. The order in the poem, as the references show, is very different, and it may be helpful to indicate it.

(1) Milton plunges into the very midst of the whole subject by depicting the rebels lying stunned on the lake after their fall: they are roused by Satan, a council is held, Man’s ruin resolved on, and intrusted to Satan. Hell and Chaos are described.

I., II.

(2) Satan traverses Chaos, and explores the World, finds Eden, and plots the Fall.

II.–IV.

(3) Raphael now visits Adam and Eve. He describes their position in the universe, and warns them of their danger. In order to explain Satan’s attitude, and to gratify Adam’s curiosity, Raphael begins to narrate the course of events from the beginning—

V.

viz.:—the War in Heaven and the Expulsion;

and the Creation of the World.

VII.
Adam tells Raphael of his finding himself in Eden, and of the prohibition to touch the tree of knowledge. Raphael repeats the warning, and leaves him.

(4) They sin and are expelled.

THE COSMOLOGY OF PARADISE LOST.

Much of Paradise Lost is occupied with events that take place outside the universe as known to man—in Heaven, Hell, and Chaos; much, too, with matters connected with that universe; while the relations of the various realms to one another, and the nature of man's World as described or assumed in the poem, are so peculiar and so fundamental, that clear ideas on the subject are of the highest importance.

On reading the poem we find that Book I. does not begin the story, for there the War in Heaven is over and the rebels are undergoing punishment elsewhere; it is not till Books V._VI. that the Angel Raphael is introduced, giving Adam a "full narration" of things from the beginning—and it is chiefly by means of these later books that we construct the key to the earlier ones.

I. At the earliest period referred to by Raphael, Space consists of two parts, Heaven or the Empyrean, and Chaos:¹ "as yet this World was not", nor Man, nor Hell. Heaven alone is created, or formed: the rest of space is a blank. This stage we may symbolise² by figure 1. Heaven, we gather, is the region of light and life, the abode of God and the Angels—"the Sons of God". Of its size and shape nothing definite is said. It is totally cut off by means

² The diagrams are merely symbolic: the form of Space, the relative magnitude of Heaven, Chaos, and Hell, and the exact position of the World are not indicated in the poem.
INTRODUCTION.

...and of a crystal floor from Chaos; various ornamental features are mentioned—as gates, battlements, and walls; and its beauty is suggested by descriptions of ideal earthly scenery, "heavenly paradises". The Angels are of two kinds—Cherubim and Seraphim, arranged in three ranks—Archangels or Chiefs, Princes, and individual Powers or Intelligences, each kind having its special duties: the peculiar nature and mode of existence of these immaterial beings are described—their immortality, their might, their power of assuming any shape, and so forth. In all this Milton follows hints from the Scriptures, especially the vision of St. John (in the Book of Revelation), Jewish writings, Dante, and the traditions of the early and middle ages. He cautions us that his language is merely symbolical.

The Almighty, Himself invisible, has His throne on a central mount, clouded in dazzling brightness, where He receives the adoration of His sons, and makes known His commands.

Chaos, "the Deep" or "the Abyss", is the name which Milton gives to that portion of space which lies outside Heaven. Its nature is inconceivable and indescribable, for it consists of that which has not yet been organised into matter,—neither earth, air, fire, nor water. The whole region is utterly devoid of life and light; it is left by the Almighty in utter confusion and darkness—"to the sway of Anarchy and Night":

"a dark
Illimitable ocean, without bound,
Without dimension: where length, breadth, and highth,
And time, and place, are lost; where eldest Night
And Chaos, ancestors, of Nature, hold Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions fierce, Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring Their embryo atoms" (II. 891–900).

1 Masson.
2 The fullest description of Chaos and its presiding deity is given in Book II. 890–1033.
II. This division of Space continues until the revolt of the Angels, which leads to their expulsion: the floor of Heaven opens, they are driven out through the gap, and fall through “the Abyss” for nine days. Then they come to the place which the Almighty has prepared for them out of a portion of Chaos. It lies open to receive them, closes above them, and imprisons them. This new abode of theirs is called Hell: it is situated in the part of Space remotest from Heaven, in “the bottomless pit”, and is partitioned off from Chaos by walls and roof of fire. Its shape is not described, but the roof is said to be vaulted (fig. 2). Within it was indeed a place of torment, “created evil, for evil only good”, “a place of fierce extremes”, “with many a frozen, many a fiery Alp”, “a universe of death”; so that Satan exclaims, on surveying it,

"Here at least
We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for His envy, will not drive us hence."

A means of exit into Chaos is afterwards discovered, through a gateway, guarded by two beings named Sin and Death. These open the gate for Satan, but cannot close it again: so that the Infernals can henceforth pass out and in at will.

III. After their fall the Angels lie stunned and bewildered on a burning lake for nine days, and it is during this period that the next change is brought about. For some time the Almighty had purposed creating a new World, and placing in it a new and favoured race. At His command the Messiah now issues forth “far into Chaos”, and with “the golden compass” “circumscribes this Universe” of Earth, and Planets, and all that is cognisable by man. This new World hangs from the floor of Heaven by a golden chain attached to its topmost point, or zenith; but whether it is suspended from the centre of the Empyrean, and poised about the centre of Space (as suggested in diagram 3), and what its relative size, cannot be determined.¹

Man is thus in a middle position, the Good above, the Evil below, and he is to be connected with both. For the use of the good angels a golden stairway is let down from Heaven, and for the use of the evil ones a broad path, or bridge, is made by Sin and Death through the Deep in the track taken by Satan on his journey of exploration (II. 1024, &c.).

The golden stair can be drawn up as if to secure Heaven against unwished-for visitants, but the lower bridge is never closed. The two roads meet at the same point, where there is an opening affording access to the interior of the World.

IV. Let us now look at this new World. It was created primarily² for a new race of beings, Man, and his abode, the Earth, is appropriately made its centre. It is a complicated system of ten hollow spheres or shells fitted one within another, and around the solid Earth. Each sphere has a motion of its own, imparted, in the first place, by the outside shell, called the Primum Mobile, or First Moved—how it is moved we are not told. Of these spheres only two are material—the Primum Mobile or hard, external casing, and the next within it, the Crystalline Sphere, which consists of a clear, watery fluid. The first is designed as a protection to the whole system, the latter to moderate the extremes of heat and cold which may permeate the outer framework. The remaining eight are, or may be regarded as, mere divisions of space, in which the several planets or orbs have their respective orbits. It was in all probability to account for the different motions of the several planets that the separate revolutions of the spheres were assumed. The seven planetary spheres, beginning with that nearest the Earth, are:

!Diagram of the seven planetary spheres

the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn. The eighth sphere contains those stars which occupy a fixed position with regard to one another, and it is therefore called the Fixed or the Firmament: it revolves once daily, carrying all its stars round with it. The Earth is supposed to be stationary.

This theory of the World was gradually given up in favour of the simpler one of Copernicus (1473–1543), which was advocated by Galileo and others, and finally established by Kepler and Newton. According to this the Sun is the centre.

1 More correctly, the sun is not at the centre, but at the common focus of the ellipses of the paths described by the planets.
INTRODUCTION.

of our 'universe, and is almost stationary; the Earth and the other planets revolve about it, whilst some of these planets, e.g. the Earth, have satellites of their own; and finally the 'fixed stars' are outside the solar universe altogether.

Milton was well acquainted with the Copernican system, and may quite possibly have accepted it; but in a poem concerned with topics so far beyond the pale of experience and knowledge, and so full of ancient and mediæval ideas, beliefs, and fancies, the old theory, however erroneous, was not only fitting, but necessary; for it is involved in very many of the thoughts borrowed by Milton, as it is in some of our phrases at this day; \(^1\) in Milton's time it was still generally accepted, and it was undoubtedly more poetical than the new system.\(^2\)

THE METRE.

(1) The poem is written in blank verse, or unrimed iambic pentameters; that is, the typical line consists of ten syllables, divided into five feet of two syllables each, the stress falling on the second syllable, e.g.:

\text{With gems' | and gold' | en lus' | tre rich' | embla'zed.}

(2) A repetition of such typical lines, even if possible, would be extremely wearisome; and we find the lines modified in various ways:

(a) by an additional syllable at the end of the line; e.g. I. 38;

1 Professor Masson instances such phrases as 'out of one's sphere'.
2 Consider e.g. the quaint fancy of the music of the spheres as expressed by Shakespeare (Merchant of Venice, V. i. 6c)—

"There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins;
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.'
(b) by additional syllables not at the end; such syllables are usually elided: e.g.—

His tem' | ple right' | against'; the tem' | ple of God'.

The e of passive participles in -ed and -en is usually elided.

(c) one or even two of the five stresses may be dropped: e.g.—

A dun' | geon hor' | tible on all' | sides round',

where the stress fails in the third foot owing to the syllable -ble.

(d) or the stress may be inverted: e.g.—

Here for | his en' | vy; will' | not drive' | us' hence.
A mind' | not' so' | be changed' | by place' | or time'.

(The inverted feet are trochees.)

(3) The breaks in the sentences do not come at the ends of the lines only; but the construction is carried on without regard to the division into lines, and we get longer or shorter groups just as the case requires. Thus, the end of a sentence may occur in any part of the line or at the end. This gives ten possible positions, but there are frequently two breaks in one line. The result is such variety in the groupings, and such a fitness between thought and language, that there is never even an approach to monotony.

BOOK I.

The subject of the poem, Man's fall. Invocation of the Holy Spirit's aid.

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the World, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful seat,
Sing, Heavenly Muse, that on the secret top
Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
That shepherd who first taught the chosen seed
In the beginning how the Heavens and Earth
Rose out of Chaos: or, if Sion hil!
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flow'd Fast by the oracle of God, I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
And chiefly thou, O Spirit, that dost prefer
Before all temples the upright heart and pure,
Instruct me, for thou know'st; thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast Abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant: (what in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support;
That to the height of this great argument
I may assert Eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.

Man's fall caused by Satan in revenge for his expulsion from Heaven.

Say first—for Heaven hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell—say first what cause
Moved our grand parents, in that happy state,
Favoured of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the World besides.
Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?
The infernal Serpent; he it was, whose guile,
Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host
Of rebel Angels, by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equalled the Most High,
If he opposed; and with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God
Raised impious war in Heaven and battle proud,
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
Hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal sky,
With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
In adamantine chains and penal fire,
Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.

Satan, recovering from his stupor, "views the situation": Hell described.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he, with his horrid crew,
Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf,
Confounded, though immortal. But his doom
Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
Torments him; round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witnessed huge affliction and dismay,
Mixed with obdurate pride and steadfast hate.
At once, as far as Angel’s ken, he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild.
A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
No light; but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell, hope never comes
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed.
Such place Eternal Justice had prepared
For those rebellious; here their prison ordained
In utter darkness, and their portion set,
As far removed from God and light of Heaven,
As from the centre thrice to the utmost pole.
Oh how unlike the place from whence they fell!
There the companions of his fall, o’erwhelmed
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns; and, weterling by his side,
One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and named
Beelzebub. To whom the Arch-Enemy,
And thence in Heaven called Satan, with bold words
Breaking the horrid silence, thus began:—

Satan’s speech to his comrade Beelzebub: he avows undying hate, *and urges "eternal war."

“If thou beest he—but Oh, how fallen! how changed
From him!—who, in the happy realms of light,"
Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads, though bright—if he whom mutual league,
United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
Joined with me once, now misery hath joined
In equal ruin; into what pit thou seest
From what highth fallen: so much the stronger proved
He with his thunder: and till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
Nor what the potent Victor in his rage
Can else inflict, do I repent, or change,
Though changed in outward lustre, that fixed mind,
And high disdain from sense of injured merit,
That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
And to the fierce contention brought along Innumerable force of Spirits armed,
That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
His utmost power with adverse power opposed
In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven,
And shook his throne. What though the field be lost?
All is not lost—the unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield:
And what is else not to be overcome.
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his power
Who, from the terror of this arm, so late
Doubted his empire—that were low indeed;
That were an ignominy and shame beneath
This downfall; since, by fate, the strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail;
Since, through experience of this great event,
In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
PARADISE LOST.

We may with more successful hope resolve 120
To wage by force or guile eternal war.
Irreconcilable to our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in the excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of Heaven."

So spake the apostate Angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair;
And him thus answered soon his bold compeer:

Beelzebub’s reply: he is less hopeful:—’What avails it if we live only to suffer?’

“O Prince, O Chief of many thronèd powers
That led the embattled Seraphim to war
Under thy conduct, and, in dreadful deeds
Fearless, endangered Heaven’s perpetual King,
And put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate!
Too well I see and rue the dire event
That, with sad overthrow and foul defeat,
Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty host
In horrible destruction laid thus low,
As far as gods and Heavenly essences
Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains Invincible, and vigour soon returns,
Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
Here swallowed up in endless misery.
But what if he our conqueror (whom I now
Of force believe almighty, since no less Than such could have o’erpowered such force as ours)
Have left us this our spirit and strength entire,
Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, whate’er his business be,
Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
Or do his errands in the gloomy Deep?
What can it then avail though yet we feel Strength undiminished, or eternal being
To undergo eternal punishment?"
Whereunto with speedy words the Arch-Fiend replied:

_Satan's rejoinder: 'Revenge is sweet; we can live to thwart our enemy.'_

"Fallen Cherub, to be weak is miserable,
Doing or suffering: but of this be sure—
To do aught good never will be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will
Whom we resist. If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil;
Which oftentimes may succeed so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail not, and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destined aim.

_The storm is over: let us muster our forces and consult together._

But see! the angry victor hath recalled
His ministers of vengeance and pursuit
Back to the gates of Heaven: the sulphurous hail,
Shot after us in storm, o'erblown hath laid
The fiery surge that from the precipice
Of Heaven received us falling; and the thunder,
Winged with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless Deep.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our foe.
Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
There rest, if any rest can harbour there;
And, reassembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how we may henceforth most offend
Our enemy, our own loss how repair,
How overcome this dire calamity,
What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
If not, what resolution from despair."

Satan's vastness suggested by comparisons.

Thus Satan, talking to his nearest mate,
With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blazed; his other parts besides Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood, in bulk as huge
As whom the fables name of monstrous size,
Titanian or Earth-born, that warred on Jove,
Briareos or Typhon, whom the den
By ancient Tarsus held, or that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean stream.
Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-foundered skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea, and wished morn delays.

He is allowed to rise.

So stretched out huge in length the Arch-Fiend lay, Chained on the burning lake; nor ever thence
Had risen, or heaved his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
Left him at large to his own dark designs,
That with reiterated crimes he might
Heap on himself damnation, while he sought
Evil to others, and enraged might see
How all his malice served but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy, shown
On Man by him seduced, but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured.

Satan and Beelzebub fly to land: the land described.

Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames
Driven backward slope their pointing spires, and, rolled
In billows, leave in the midst a horrid vale.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight; till on dry land
He lights—if it were land that ever burned
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,
And such appeared in hue as when the force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
And fueled entrails, thence conceiving fire,
Sublimed with mineral fury, aid the winds,
And leave a singed bottom all involved
With stench and smoke. Such resting found the sole
Of unblest feet. Him followed his next mate;
Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian flood
As gods, and by their own recovered strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal power.
Satan's soliloquy on viewing their new abode.

"Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"
Said then the lost Archangel, "this the seat
That we must change for Heaven? this mournful gloom
For that celestial light? Be it so, since he
Who now is sovran can dispose and bid
What shall be right: farthest from him is best,
Whom reason hath equalled, force hath made supreme
Where joy for ever dwells! Hail, horrors! hail,
Infernal world! and thou, profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor—one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.

What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be, all but less than he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least
We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:
Here we may reign secure; and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven.

They agree to rouse and rally their followers.

But wherefore let us then our faithful friends,
The associates and co-partners of our loss,
Lie thus astonished on the oblivious pool,
And call them not to share with us their part
In this unhappy mansion, or once more
With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regained in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?"

So Satan spake; and him Beelzebub
Thus answered:"Leader of those armies bright
Which, but the Omnipotent, none could have foiled! If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge Of hope in fears and dangers—heard so oft In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge Of battle, when it raged, in all assaults Their surest signal—they will soon resume New courage, and revive, though now they lie Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire, As we erewhile, astounded and amazed; No wonder, fallen such a pernicious highth!"

The appearance of Satan as he makes for the shore, and of his legions as they lie on the lake.

He scarce had ceased when the superior Fiend Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield, Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round, Behind him cast. The broad circumference Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views At evening, from the top of Fesolé, Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands, Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe. His spear—to equal which the tallest pine Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast Of some great ammiral, were but a wand— He walked with, to support uneasy steps Over the burning marle, not like those steps On Heaven's azure; and the torrid clime Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire. Nathless he so endured, till on the beach Of that inflamed sea he stood, and called His legions—Angel forms, who lay entranced, Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks In Vallombrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arched imbower; or scattered sedge
Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion armed Hath vexed the Red-Sea coast, whose waves o’erthrew
Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
From the safe shore their floating carcases
And broken chariot-wheels. So thick bestrewn,
Abject and lost, lay these, covering the flood,
Under amazement of their hideous change.

_Satan taunts them for their inactivity, and calls them to arms._

He called so loud, that all the hollow deep
Of Hell resounded: “Princes, Potentates,
Warriors, the flower of Heaven—once yours; now lost,
If such astonishment as this can seize Eternal Spirits! Or have ye chosen this place
After the toil of battle to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the ease you find
To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?
Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
To adore the conqueror, who now beholds
Cherub and Seraph rolling in the flood
With scattered arms and ensigns, till anon
His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern
The advantage, and, descending, tread us down
Thus drooping, or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf?—
Awake, arise, or be for ever fallen!”

_Their appearance: their multitude suggested by comparisons._

They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung
Upon the wing, as when men wont to watch,
On duty sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;
Yet to their General's voice they soon obeyed
Innumerable. As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Waved round the coast, up-called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night, and darkened all the land of Nile;
So numberless were those bad Angels seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires;
Till, as a signal given, the uplifted spear
Of their great Sultan waving to direct
Their course, in even balance down they light
On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain:
A multitude like which the populous North
Poured never from her frozen loins to pass
Rhene or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the South, and spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.

The leaders come forward—for the time being, nameless.

Forthwith, from every squadron and each band,
The heads and leaders thither haste where stood
Their great Commander—godlike shapes, and forms
Excelling human; princely dignities;
And powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones,
Though of their names in Heavenly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased
By their rebellion from the Books of Life.
Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve
Got them new names, till, wandering o'er the Earth,
Through God's high sufferance for the trial of Man,
By falsities and lies the greatest part
Of Mankind they corrupted to forsake
God their Creator, and the invisible
Glory of him that made them to transform Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
With gay religions full of pomp and gold,
And devils to adore for deities:
Then were they known to men by various names,
And various idols through the heathen world.

The leaders enumerated and described under the names they afterwards acquired as heathen deities.

Say, Muse, their names then known, who first, who last,
Roused from the slumber on that fiery couch,
At their great Emperor's call, as next in worth Came singly where he stood on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
The chief were those who, from the pit of Hell
Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
Their seats, long after, next the seat of God,
Their altars by his altar, gods adored
Among the nations round, and durst abide Jehovah thundering out of Sion, throned
Between the Cherubim; yea, often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
Abominations; and with cursed things
His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned,
And with their darkness durst affront his light.
First, Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard that passed through fire
To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite
Worshipped in Rabba and her watery plain,
In Argob and in Bashan, to the stream
Of utmost Amon. Nor content with such Audacious neighbourhood, the wisest heart
Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On that opprobrious hill, and made his grove
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell.
Next Chemos, the obscene dread of Moab’s sons,
From Aroer to Nebo and the wild
Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
And Horonaim, Seon’s realm, beyond
The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
And Eleâle to the Asphallic pool:
Peor his other name, when he enticed
Israel in Sittim, on their march from Nile,
To do him wanton rites, which cost them wc.
Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarged
Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by hate;
Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
With these came they who, from the bordering flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baâlim and Ashtaroth—those male,
These feminine. For Spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure,
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,
Like cumbrous flesh; but in what shape they choose,
Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
Can execute their aery purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfil.
For those the race of Israel oft forsook
Their living Strength, and unfrequented left
His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods; for which their heads, as low
Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear
Of despicable foes. With these in troop Came Ashtoreth, whom the Phoenicians called Astarte, Queen of Heaven, with crescent horns;
To whose bright image nightly by the moon
Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
By that uxorious king whose heart, though large,
Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer’s day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale
Infected Sion’s daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Next came one
Who mourned in earnest, when the captive ark
Maimed his brute image, head and hands lopt off;
In his own temple, on the grunsel-edge,
Where he fell flat and shamed his worshippers:
Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish; yet had his temple high
Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abana and Pharphar, lucid streams.
He also against the house of God was bold:
A leper once he lost, and gained a king—
Ahaz, his sottish conqueror, whom he drew
God's altar to disparage and displace
For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods
Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared
A crew who, under names of old renown—
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train—
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abused
Fanatic Egypt and her priests to seek
Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms
Rather than human. Nor did Israel escape
The infection, when their borrowed gold composed
The calf in Oreb; and the rebel king
Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
Likening his Maker to the grazed ox—
Jehovah, who, in one night, when he passed
From Egypt marching, equalled with one stroke
Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
Belial came last; than whom a Spirit more lewd
Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. To him no temple stood
Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than he
In temples and at altars, when the priest
Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons, who filled
With lust and violence the house of God?
In courts and palaces he also reigns,
And in luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
And injury and outrage; and, when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine.
Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Exposed a matron, to avoid worse rape.
These were the prime in order and in might:
The rest were long to tell; though far renowned,
The Ionian gods of Javan's issue held
Gods, yet confessed later than Heaven and Earth,
Their boasted parents;—Titan, Heaven’s first-born,
With his enormous brood, and birthright seized
By younger Saturn: he from mightier Jove,
His own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
So Jove usurping reigned. These, first in Crete
And Ida known, thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air,
Their highest Heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,
Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
Of Doric land; or who with Saturn old
Fled over Adria to the Hesperian fields,
And o'er the Celtic roamed the utmost isles.

The leaders having assembled, Satan cheers them and bids Azazel raise the standard

All these and more came flocking; but with looks Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appeared Obscure some glimpse of joy to have found their Chief
Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost
In loss itself; which on his countenance cast
Like doubtful hue. But he, his wonted pride
Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears:

Then straight commands that, at the warlike sound
Of trumpets loud and clarions, be upreared
His mighty standard. That proud honour claimed Azazel as his right, a Cherub tall:

Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled

The imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich imblazed, Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds:

At which the universal host up-sent
A shout that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.

Thereupon their followers form in battle array and march to Dorian music.

All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving: with them rose
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appeared, and serried shields in thick array
Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorders—such as raised
To hight of noblest temper heroes old
Arming to battle, and instead of rage
Deliberate valour breathed, firm, and unmoved
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat;
Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
Breathing united force with fixed thought,
Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil. And now

Satan views his army, compared with which the greatest forces of ancient or medieval times are insignificant.

Advanced in view they stand—a horrid front
Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty Chief
Had to impose. He through the armed files
Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse
The whole battalion views—their order due,
Their visages and stature as of gods;
Their number last he sums. And now his heart
Distends with pride, and, hardening in his strength,
Glories: for never, since created Man,
Met such embodied force as, named with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warred on by cranes—though all the giant brood
Of Phlegra with the heroic race were joined
That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side
Mixed with auxiliar gods; and what resounds
In fable or romance of Uther's son,
Begirt with British and Armoric knights;
And all who since, baptized or infidel,
Jousted in Asframont or Montalban,
Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisond,
Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore,
When Charlemain with all his peerage fell
By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond
Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed

The appearance of Satan and his host suggested by various similes.

Their dread Commander. He, above the rest
In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tower. His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appeared
Less than archangel ruined, and the excess
Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-risen
Looks through the horizontal misty air
Shorn of his beams, or, from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations, and with fear of change
Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone
Above them all the Archangel: but his face
Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and care
Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
Of dauntless courage, and considerate pride
Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned
For ever now to have their lot in pain—
Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced
Of Heaven, and from eternal splendours flung
For his revolt—yet faithful how they stood,
Their glory withered; as, when Heaven's fire
Hath scathed the forest oaks or mountain pines,
With singed top their stately growth, though bare,
Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared
To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
With all his peers: attention held them mute.
Thrice he assayed, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
Tears, such as Angels weep, burst forth: at last Words interwove with sighs found out their way:
Satan harangues his host: 'their defeat was due to ignorance of the enemy's strength.'

"O myriads of immortal Spirits! O Powers
Matchless, but with the Almighty!—and that strife
Was not inglorious, though the event was dire,
As this place testifies, and this dire change
Hateful to utter. But what power of mind,
Foreseeing or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have feared,
How such united force of gods, how such
As stood like these, could ever know repulse?
For who can yet believe, though after loss,
That all these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to reascend,
Self-raised, and repossess their native seat?
For me, be witness all the host of Heaven,
If counsels different, or dangers shunned
By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns Monarch in Heaven till then as one secure
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
Consent or custom, and his regal state
Put forth at full, but still, his strength concealed—
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.

Henceforth they must oppose him by guile; a visit to the new-formed world suggested; war resolved on.

Henceforth his might we know, and know our own,
So as not either to provoke, or dread
New war provoked: our better part remains
To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not; that he no less
At length from us may find, who overcomes
By force hath overcome but half his foe.
Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in Heaven that he ere long Intended to create, and therein plant
A generation whom his choice regard
Should favour equal to the Sons of Heaven.
Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption—thither, or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold
Celestial Spirits in bondage, nor the Abyss
Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
Full counsel must mature. Peace is despaired;
For who can think submission? War, then, war
Open or understood, must be resolved."

He spake; and, to confirm his words, out-flew Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
Of mighty Cherubim; the sudden blaze
Far round illumined Hell. Highly they raged
Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms
Clashed on their sounding shields the din of war
Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.

Led by Mammon they quarry gold and cast it, ready for use in building their palace.

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf—undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur. Thither, winged with speed,
A numerous brigad hastened: as when bands
Of pioners, with spade and pickaxe armed,
Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on—
Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell
From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In vision beatific. By him first
Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
Ransacked the centre, and with impious hands
Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth
For treasures better hid. Soon had his crew Opened into the hill a spacious wound,
And digged out ribs of gold. Let none admire
That riches grow in Hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell
Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,
Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
And strength, and art, are easily outdone
By Spirits reprobate, and in an hour
What in an age they, with incessant toil
And hands innumerable, scarce perform.
Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared,
That underneath had veins of liquid fire
Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scummed the bullion-dross.
A third as soon had formed within the ground
A various mould, and from the boiling cells
By strange conveyance filled each hollow nook;
As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.

Pandemonium described: its architect, Mulciber.

Anon out of the earth a fabric huge
Rose, like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet—
Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid
With golden architrave; nor did there want Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures graven:
The roof was fretted gold. Not Babylon
Nor great Alcairo such magnificence
Equalled in all their glories, to enshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile
Stood fixed her stately hight; and straight the doors,
Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
Within, her ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement: from the arched roof,
Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, for
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. The hasty multitude
Admiring entered; and the work some praise,
And some the architect. His hand was known
In Heaven by many a towered structure high,
Where sceptred Angels held their residence,
And sat as princes, whom the supreme King
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his Hierarchy, the Orders bright.
Nor was his name unheard or unadored
In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land
Men called him Mulciber; and how he fell
From Heaven they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day, and with the setting sun
Dropped from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos, the Ægean isle. Thus they relate,
Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
Fell long before; nor aught availed him now
To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he scape
By all his engines, but was headlong sent,
With his industrious crew, to build in Hell.

"The worthiest" summoned to a council, they and their attendants swarm in, and fill the hall "both on the ground and in the air".

Meanwhile the wingèd heralds, by command
Of sovrán power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandemonium, the high capital
Of Satan and his peers. Their summons called
From every band and squared regiment
By place or choice the worthiest: they anon
With hundreds and with thousands trooping came Attended. All access was thronged; the gates
And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall
(Though like a covered field, where champions bold
Wont ride in armed, and at the Soldan's chair
Defied the best of Panim chivalry
To mortal combat, or career with lance),
Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,
Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees
In spring-time, when the sun with Taurus rides,
Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
In clusters; they among fresh dews and flowers
Fly to and fro, or on the smoothèd plank,
The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
New rubbed with balm, expatiate, and confer
Their state affairs: so thick the aery crowd
Swarmed and were straitened; till, the signal given,
The followers, at a signal, all contract: the leaders hold a council.

Behold a wonder! They, but now who seemed
In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless—like that pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount; or faery elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees, while overhead the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the Earth
Wheels her pale course: they, on their mirth and dance
Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;
At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
Thus incorporeal Spirits to smallest forms
Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,
Though without number still, amidst the hall
Of that infernal court. But far within,
And in their own dimensions like themselves,
The Seraphic Lords and Cherubim
In close recess and secret conclave sat,
A thousand demigods on golden seats,
Frequent and full. After short silence then,
And summons read, the great consult began.
NOTES.

[The letter (L.) denotes that a word is used in its primary Latin sense; the letter (G.) that a further note, chiefly etymological, is given at p. 82.]

1-5. Compare the opening lines of Paradise Regained.

1-3. For the prohibition, see vii. 323-333.

2. mortal, rendering liable to death.

"The day thou eatest thereof, my sole command Transgressed, inevitably thou shalt die, From that day mortal."

vii. 32f

6. Sing, &c. All preceding epic poets—Homer, Virgil, Dante, &c., use a similar form of invocation: in Milton's case it is a devout prayer for 'that impulse or voice of God by which the prophets were inspired'.

secret. This term probably refers to the manner in which Moses received God's communications: see Exodus xix. 3, 12, 20; xxiv. 2 ('and Moses alone shall come near'), &c.

7. Oreb (Horeb), or of Sinai. Milton refers either to two events—the appearance in the burning bush (Exodus iii.) and the giving of the Law—or, more probably, to the latter event alone, Sinai being a part of Horeb, a mountain group north of the Red Sea.

8. that shepherd, &c. Moses, whose account of the creation is in Genesis i. Cp. Psalm lxxvii. 20.

the chosen seed: the Jews considered themselves to be God's favoured people.

9. the Heavens and Earth, i.e. this Universe: see Cosmology.

10. Sion hill, where the Temple stood.

11. Siloa's brook, a stream flowing from the pool of Siloam into the Kidron, just beneath the city walls and very near the Temple ('the oracle', 1 Kings vi.).

12. fast by, close to oracle. (G.)

14. middle, either (1) mean, ordinary, or (2) more probably as in ll. 515-17, where the middle air denotes the air on the mountain tops. Cp. 516 n.

15. Aonia (or Mt. Helicon) in Boeotia was the supposed abode of the nine Muses from whom the ancient poets sought inspiration. Cp. vii. 12-14, and ix. 1-47.
Milton means, therefore, either that he intends to surpass the ancient poets, Homer and Virgil, or that he intends to write on subjects higher than any they ever treated of.

15. pursues, treats of. A Latinism.
16. rhime (properly rime), verse. (G.)
18. Cp. 1 Corinthians iii. 16.
21. Abyss, lit. the bottomless depth (of the sea, &c.): here, Chaos (Gk.)
23. low, weak, feeble.
24. 'In a way befitting the subject of my poem.'
highth, the correct form of the word: cp. depth, &c.
25. assert, defend in argument.
29. grand parents, first parents, ancestors.
32. For one restraint, &c., 'because of one restraint, being, in all else, lords', &c. See 1-3 n.
33. seduced, led away from (allegiance, duty, &c.). Cp. ii. 368, 'seduce them to our party'.
34. infernal, lit. belonging to the lower regions (or 'hell'): hence, wicked, fiendish. But the word is also used without the notion of 'wicked': cp. "infernal court", 792.
35. For Satan's motives see i. 160-63, 651-54, ii. 348-51, 373, &c.
36. what time, when: cp. Lycias, 28, "what time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn".
38. Note the extra syllable.
39. peers, equals. Satan's 'peers' were his fellow-archangels. For the 'equality' see v. 659, &c.
34. infernal, lit. belonging to the lower regions (or 'hell'): hence, wicked, fiendish. But the word is also used without the notion of 'wicked': cp. "infernal court", 792.
35. For Satan's motives see i. 160-63, 651-54, ii. 348-51, 373, &c.
36. what time, when: cp. Lycias, 28, "what time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn".
38. Note the extra syllable.
39. peers, equals. Satan's 'peers' were his fellow-archangels. For the 'equality' see v. 659, &c.
"He, of the first,
If not the first Archangel, great in power,
In favour and pre-eminence, yet fraught
With envy against the Son of God", &c.; and v. 812, where Abdiel addresses him—
"In place so high above thy peers".
His crime, therefore, was his rivalry with God—his ambition to usurp the place of divine glory which belonged to God alone.
40. See: v. 864; Satan, leading the revolt, declares—
"Our puissance is our own; our own right hand Shall teach us highest deeds, by proof to try
Who is our equal".
41. Ambitious. (G.)

43. impious, not pious, wanting in reverence to God.

ethereal sky, the Empyrean, or Heaven.

46. ruin, in its Latin sense, downfall.
combustion, confusion, uproar, tumult: lit. conflagration.
See vi. 871.

47. flaming.

48. adamantine, lit. made of adamant; i.e. indestructible, unbreakable; cp. ii. 646, "adamantine rock...unpenetrable,...unconsumed" by fire; and ii. 168, "we lay chained on the burning lake". The name 'adamant' was applied to steel and the diamond.

penal fire, fire used as a means of inflicting punishment. (L. pena, pain.) Cp. 'penal laws', 'penalty', &c.

49. who, &c.: 'because he', 'since he', &c. A Latinism.

50. nine was a sort of sacred number with the ancients, as being a multiple of three. Cp. the use of the number seven in the Old Testament.

the space, &c. Why not simply 'nine days'?

51. crew, any company of men, as a ship's crew. Cp. Spenser, "A noble crew of lords and ladies".

52. confounded, stupefied, struck senseless.

54. witness: cp. vi. 327, "Then Satan first knew pain" (that is, in the war in heaven preceding the expulsion). For other references to the new consciousness of pain see 125, 147, 336, &c.

55. baleful, sorrowful. (bale, fr. A.S. bale, evil. Cp. Shak., Coriolanus i. 1. 66, "The one side must have bale").

57. witnessed, bore witness to.

58. obdurate, immovable, unchangeable: lit. hardened. For the accent, cp. 'triumphs' l. 123, 'sojourn' iii. 15, &c.

59. ken may be taken either as a verb or as a noun; if the latter, angels will be in the possessive case, either sing. or plural, as the mark of the possessive was in Milton's time often omitted. (M.E. kennen, to know.)

60. situation, region.

61. light: what is the case? Supply the verb.

62. darkness visible, &c. Cp. 181-83—

"The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful");
and Il Penseroso, 79, 80—

"Where glowing embers through the room Teach light to counterfeit a gloom."

The language used in the text is contradictory only if taken literally—"the dungeon flamed", i.e. the flames were visible, but the dull 'glimmering' was only sufficient to reveal the prevailing horror and gloom. Mr. Beeching says, "The flame of a spirit-lamp in a dark room will suggest what is meant". Cp. also Job x. 22.

63. darkness visible, that is, gloom. Darkness is not itself visible any more than silence is audible. [What figure of speech is 'darkness visible', taken literally?]

66, 67. '(where) hope, that comes to all (mortals), never comes.' The thought is found in Euripides: and Dante (Inferno iii.) has the famous inscription over the gates of hell, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here".

68. still, ever, instantly.

urges, torments, harasses. A Latinism. Cp. ii. 88-89, "pain...must exercise us".

68, 69. Note the order—epithet, substantive, epithet. (Give other instances of this favourite idiom of Milton's.) Burning sulphur is fluid: hence 'deluge', flood.

71. those rebellious (angels) : cp. 521.

72. utter, outer, further from Heaven, hence belonging to Hell; the intervening being the 'middle' darkness. Cp. iii. 16, "through utter and through middle darkness".

74. That is, three times the distance from the centre of this Universe (the Earth) to the outside sphere (the Primum Mobile), or else to its point of suspension from the Empyrean. For this use of 'centre', cp. 680-87. On the position of the Universe in space, see Cosmology, p. 21.

78. weltering, rolling about. In the Bible of 1549 we read, "He that weltereth a stone"; in the version of 1610, "He that rolleth a stone". (Proverbs xxvi. 27.)

80. Palestine, for Philistia, the coast district to the south-west of Palestine. So also in 465.

79-81. Beelzebub, or Baalzebub, lit. 'lord of flies', was a god of the Philistines. His chief temple was at Ekron; his wishes were probably interpreted by the humming and motions of flies.

For "next in crime" (79) see note on l. 88.

82. Satan (Hebrew) enemy: his former name was Lucifer ('light-bearer'). Cp. vii. 131.

84. beëst, indicative mood (=art). In A.S. there were two forms of the present indicative of the verb 'be':

how fallen. Cp. Isaiah xiv. 12; and see p. 85.
86. transcendent, surpassing.

88. United thoughts, &c. See v. 676, &c.

Beelzebub was Satan's first 'associate' in the rebellion. He seems to have been won over at once, and to have obeyed the prime mover implicitly. As his 'next subordinate' he visits the subject Powers, 'tells, as he was taught', that they are all to assemble, "tells the suggested cause, and casts between ambiguous words...and jealousies, to sound or taint integrity" (v. 696).

93. He, the Son of God.

with his thunder. Cp. vi. 835, "in his right hand, Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent Before him", &c.; and iii. 392.

94. for, on account of.

84-94. Note (1) the abrupt change in 84 ('but O', &c.), 92 and 93; (2) the syntax of didst in 86, the antecedent being 'him' = 'thou'; (3) object to 'hath joined', viz. 'whom' in 87; (4) the classical form of expression in 91-2, "thou seest into what pit we are fallen, and from what hight"; (5) the exact force of the phrase 'so much' in 92; (6) the repeated use of the pronoun, as if to avoid mentioning God by name, e.g. in 93. So cp. all the speeches in i. and ii. (7) the want of continuity in sense and the absence of any regular principal clause in the passage. These are the first words uttered after the expulsion from Heaven, and Milton evidently intends to indicate the speaker's excitement.

97. lustre, splendour, brightness; a shining appearance. (Low L. lustrum, a window.)

98. 'Lofty pride springing from the feeling that his merit had been despised.

99, 100. Note 'contend' and its cognate 'contention'.

102. dislike, disapprove: not to 'dislike' in our sense of the word: the latter does not depend upon our 'daring', the former may.

104. dubious, for a time uncertain as to the result: the battle lasted three days. See Book vi.

105. shook his throne: what figure?

107. Study of, in its L. sense, a desire for, or, perhaps, pursuit of.

109. 'And in what else (i.e. besides these qualities) does not being overcome consist?' The line is, properly, parenthetical, or explanatory: and in some editions was printed in brackets. 'That glory', then, refers directly to 'submit or yield'.

114. 'ye' is the pronominal pronoun.
Some editors, however, put a semicolon after 'overcome', so that the line means 'and whatever other qualities are invincible', or 'in whatever besides invincibility consists'.

112. suppliant, bent. (L.)

defify, exalt into an object of worship.

114. doubted his empire, felt insecure in regard to his supremacy. (Empire; L. imperium, rule, sway.)

116. by fate, &c. Satan regards the angels as equal to God in all but power (hence 'gods'), and equally free; not created by the Almighty, but, like Him, self-formed and immortal. For Satan's view of their origin, cp. v. 853, &c.

fate, necessity, the nature of things, regarded as unalterable and beyond the power of God. Cp. vii. 172—

"Necessity and Chance Approach not me; and what I will is Fate".

117. this empyreal substance. The four elements, according to the ancients, were earth, air, fire, and water. Of these 'fire' was considered the noblest, and of it the angels, the heavens, &c., were supposed to be formed, whereas man was formed of 'earth'. Cp. 137-139. (Gk. pur, fire.)

120. more successful hope, hope that is likely to prove more fortunate, to lead to better success.

123. triumphs: either an iambic (trii'm'phs) or a spondee (tri'um'phs).

124. tyranny. In ancient Greece a tyrant was a man who usurped the supreme authority, and governed at will. He was not necessarily a bad ruler. It is probably in a neutral sense that tyranny is used here. To what contemporary event may Milton be alluding?

125. apostate, as adj., false, traitorous: lit. one who deserts (his religion, party, &c.).

126. vaunting, boasting: connected with vain.

127. compeer, an associate or companion of equal rank.

128. throned powers, i.e. powers of high rank: cp. 360 n, and see p. 19.

129. Parse led. embattled, arranged in order of battle.

130. conduct, leadership.

132. 'And put it to the proof whether His supremacy was upheld, &c.' For fate, cp. 116.

133. For chance, cp. ii. 907, &c.—"Chaos umpire sits,...next him, high arbiter, Chance governs all": and ii. 960-65.
NOTES.

134. event, outcome, issue, result (of the 'proof'). (L.)
138. essences, beings.
139. remains: why singular?
141. glory: in what did this consist? See ll. 84-6, 97, 591-94, 610-12. Hence note the exact force and appropriateness of 'extinct'.
144. of force, either perforce, of necessity; or depending on 'almighty'.
146. have: what mood, and why?
148. suffice, satisfy.
149. mightier service—i.e. than we could render if our strength were diminished.
152. the gloomy deep, Chaos.
162. providence, foresight.
166. so as, 'to such a degree that'.
167. if I fail not, if I am not mistaken. Lat. ní fállor.
169, 170. The angry Victor, the Son; his ministers, the good angels. But according to Book vi. the Son alone drove out the rebels, and the good angels had taken part in the preceding war only. The difficulty is easily explained. Either Satan, as a rebel, did not know of the change, or he was unwilling to acknowledge the Son's superior might. Cp. vi. 801 and 880, and ii. 77-9 and 996-98.
172. laid, stilled, calmed. 'The storm of hail having blown over, the fiery waves become calm.'
176. his, masculine, as 'Thunder' is personified. (At this time (c. 1660) 'its' was just coming into use as the neuter of 'his'. In the Bible of 1610 'its' occurs only once (Leviticus xxv. 5), in Milton's poems only four or five times.)
177. vast, extensive, perhaps with the notion of waste, desolate.
178. slip, let slip (transitive). Cp. Macbeth, 'I...slipt the hour', and such current phrases as 'slip a cable', &c.
179. satiate, satiated, satisfied; so 'uplift' or uplifted in 193.
185. harbour, dwell, find a lodging-place. (A harbour was a lodging-place for the officers of an army—Low Latin, heribergum: Ger. heer, an army, and bergen, to shelter. Remains of old Roman villas on the great Roman roads were often used by travellers in later times as inns, and were called Cold Harbours; the name still survives in about fourteen places in England. A harbinger was a person who went on in advance to prepare a harbour.)
186. afflicted, in its Latin sense, flung or dashed down, crushed, powers, forces, armies.

197. fables, in the classical sense, stories of heathen heroes and deities.

198-200. (whether) Titanian or Earth-born. The Titans were the twelve sons of Uranus and Ge (i.e. Heaven and Earth); the Earth-born, offspring of the same parents, were the Giants. According to the legends the Giants made war on Jove, and were destroyed for their insolence. Briareos was one of the Titans, Typhon one of the Giants. The latter was supposed to dwell in a cave in Cilicia (in Asia Minor), which Milton denotes by Tarsus, its capital.

In 510, Milton speaks of “Titan, Heaven’s first-born, with his enormous brood”. There is no individual Titan known. But the legends do not agree with one another.

201. Leviathan, &c. The description fits the whale—except the ‘scaly rind’ (206): the name (Hebrew) is found in Job xli., and seems to be applied to the crocodile: but in other passages of Scripture, as in Ps. civ. 26, to any sea-monster.

203. ocean stream: in Homeric times the ocean was regarded as a stream encircling the (flat) earth, and connected with the Sea (the Mediterranean) in the East and in the West. Scan the line.

203-207. Olaus Magnus, a Swede (in his History of the Northern Nations, 1658), and other writers of Milton’s time, tell of the whale’s being taken for an island by sailors, who anchor to his back, drive stakes into him, &c. Milton speaks of him as ‘like a promontory’ (vii. 414); four acres in extent, says another writer!

204. pilot, captain.

night-founedered, lost in the darkness, stopped by the night coming on. (Strictly, founder means to sink.)

skiff, ship. (Now the word denotes a small boat.)

207. under the lee, on the side (of the whale) protected from the wind. What is the other side called? (M.E. lee, also lew, shelter.)

208. Invests, enshrouds, wraps (like a garment). (L. vestis, a garment.)

wished. Note similar omissions of prepositions in 282 (‘fallen’), 660 (‘despaired’), 662 (‘resolved’), &c.

196–210. What figure of speech is employed here? What feature of the Fiend is it intended to emphasise?

211. Had, would have.

214. reiterated, repeated again and again. (L. re, and iterum, again.)
NOTES.

215. damnation, punishment: see 219 and 220.

219. seduced, led away from duty and virtue.

226. incumbent, lying, leaning, or resting his weight on.

230-37. What is the passage meant to describe, and by what figure? Comparing it with 196-210, is it more or less effective, and why?

230. (What was the hue?)

230, 231. Note the peculiar assumption in this passage as to the cause of earthquakes.

232. Pelorus, now Cape Faro, N.E. of Sicily. It is near Etna. Probably 'from' governs 'shattered side'.

234. fuelled, full of fuel.

234-37. thence, &c. 'The contents of the mountain catching fire from this wind are changed into vapour by a heat like that of molten metals, and, in their turn, increase the force of the wind'. (Properly, subliming is a chemical operation in which volatile solids are separated from impurities, by heating, just as liquids are purified by distillation.) (L. sublimis, aloft, in the air.) involved, enveloped. (L.)

238. unblest feet: note the figure of speech and the exact force of unblest.

239. glorying, boasting. (L.)

Stygian, hateful, horrible. Cp. 195. The Styx ('hateful'), of the classical mythology, was the chief river in the lower world.

241. supernal, above. (L. super, supernus.)

242. clime, probably climate, temperature, as if 'region' referred to the position, 'clime' to the kind of country.

244. Note the peculiar use of change—like L. muto.

246, 247. dispose and bid What shall be right, 'make his own will the standard of right and wrong'—justum est id quod jussum est.

247-49. 'Furthest from him is best for us; for though we are his equals in reason, we are inferior to him in strength.' Cp. 92-4, and 144-45.

251. Infernal (from L. infra, infernus), 'very low', without the notion of 'wicked'. Cp. 251, 657, 792.

253. Cp. Horace, "Caelum non animum mutant qui trans mare currunt".
PARADISE LOST.

253-56. Cp. iv. 20-23, and iv. 75, "which way I fly is Hell, myself am Hell". Note the rare form 'its', found only three or four times in Milton. Cp. 176 n.

257. 'What I should be, in all respects except that I am inferior to Him in power.'

259-61. 'This place at any rate is free from his envy.' Note the emphatic position of 'here' and 'hence'.

261. secure, in its then usual sense, free from anxiety. (L. se, apart from, and cura, care.) See 638 n.

266. astonoshed, stunned, 'astounded' (281), 'confounded' (53), 'entranced' (301). Lit., struck senseless.

oblivious, causing forgetfulness. Cp. Macbeth, "oblivious antidote"; and 'forgetful lake', ii. 74. Milton is thinking of the river Lethe, of the classical mythology, which caused all who drank of it to forget the past.

268. mansion, place of abode. (L. mansum, to dwell.)

273. foiled, defeated. (M.E. faylen, O.F. fouler, to trample under foot.) Quite distinct from foil, anything used to set off a gem. (L. folium, a leaf.)

274. pledge, surety.

274, 275. liveliest pledge Of hope, giving life to hope.

276, 277. perilous edge of battle, either the front line of battle (L. acies), or at the critical moment. For the former sense, cp. vi. 108:—

"Before the cloudy van
On the rough edge of battle ere it joined,
Satan with vast and haughty strides advanced"

281. astounded, same as astonished. See 266.

amazed, in a stronger sense than that in which it is now used: bewildered, dazed. (From mase.)

282. fallen: cp. 208 n.

pernicious, destructive, ruinous. (L. perniciosus.)

"No falsehood can endure Touch of celestial temper" (i.e. Ithuriel's spear), &c.

(Temper, to bring to the proper degree of hardness, to mix metals in due proportion. L. temperare, to regulate.)

288. artist, a professor of an art; it also denoted a skilled worker, our 'artisan'. The 'Tuscan artist' is Galileo (1564-1642), a teacher of mathematics and astronomy at Pisa. His improvements in the telescope—for he did not invent it—enabled him to make discoveries which convinced him of the truth of the Copernican theory of astronomy. (See p. 22.) He was tried twice by the Inquisition for holding ‘erroneous’ opinions, and silenced. He was living near Florence, ‘a prisoner to the Inquisition, for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the licensers thought’, when Milton visited him in 1638-39. He had become blind in 1636. In v. 262, he is mentioned by name.

289, 290. Fesole, now Fiesole, is a hill near Florence. Valdarno, i.e. Val d’Arno, the valley in which Florence is situated.

291. spotty, refers to the dark patches in the moon; they are the shadows cast by the mountains. It was Galileo that discovered the unevenness of the moon’s surface. In v. 420 Milton attributes the ‘spots’ to the presence of vapour. It is now generally agreed that there are no rivers (nor vapour) in the moon.

292. to equal which, compared with which.

294. ammiral, the chief ship of a fleet, so called from its carrying the superior officer. (Arabic, amir, ruler, cp. ameer, and al, the.)

296. marle, ground; properly a soft, rich soil. Cp. 562.

297. Heaven’s azure, the crystal floor of Heaven.

299. Nathless, none the less; now displaced by nevertheless. The word is common in Chaucer.

300. inflamed, in its literal sense, burning, in flames.

301. entranced. (G.) What other terms are used to describe their conditions?

303. Vallombrosa (‘shady valley’), a beautiful and thickly wooded valley and hilly slope about 18 miles from Florence. It is said that Milton spent several days at a monastery that stood here.

Etruria, Tuscany.

304. imbower, form bowers.

sedge, in Hebrew the Red Sea is called ‘the sedgy sea’, on account of the large quantity of sea-weed found in it.

305. Orion (Orion), a constellation so named from a companion of Artemis or Diana, the goddess of hunting. The time of year at which this constellation sets—November or early December—was generally associated by the poets with bad weather.

“Quam multi Libyco volvuntur marmore fluctus Saevus ubi Orion hibernis conditur undis.”

Virgil, Aeneid, vii. 218-19.

(Give other instances of poetical traditions in this Book.)

armed, some of the stars of Orion appear to be arranged in the form of a sword and belt.
307. Busiris, here identified with the Pharaoh of Exodus.
Memphian, Egyptian, from the ancient capital Memphis, on the west bank of the Nile.

chivalry, army—horse and foot, though in this case mainly horse. (Exodus, xiv. 28.) Doublet ‘cavalry’. See 575 n. on infantry and cavalry.

308. perfidious. Pharaoh had given the Israelites permission to leave Egypt.

309. sojourners, temporary dwellers in a place. (O.F. sojourner, fr. L. diurnus, fr. dies, a day.)

Goshen, a district east of the delta of the Nile.
who beheld, &c. See Exodus xxiv. 30.

311. so...abject and lost—as what? Analyse the similes in lines 302-13. With 309-12 cp. 323-25.

abject, cast down.

318-22. Or...or, whether...or.

virtue, valour, bravery: lit. manliness. (I. vir.)

Scan l. 318: which word is made emphatic?

320, 321. See v. 640, &c., for the evening ‘repast’ and slumbers of the angels.

322. sworn To adore the Conqueror. In both questions Satan is taunting them: ‘They had previously risked all rather than do this—were they going to give in now?’

324. Cherub and Seraph, the two kinds of angels, ‘angels of love and angels of light’: see p. 19. Of course the reference here is to Satan’s followers—under their former names. Cp. 157, ‘Fallen Cherub’.

325. ensigns, standards, distinguishing marks or signs. (L. insignia.)

till. The construction is abrupt: supply ‘and will continue to watch us’ before till.

326. His pursuers: what kind of genitive, objective or subjective?

337. obey, in M.E. took a dative case. (Cp. Fr. obéir à.)

338, &c. Alluding to Moses and the plagues. See Exodus x. 12, &c.

341. warping. (1) This is usually regarded as a peculiar use of the nautical term ‘warp’, that is, to haul a ship forward, by means of a cable fixed some distance ahead. But this would not produce the zigzag course required by the usual explanation—‘an undulatory forward motion’ of a large mass. (2) Is not the word more probably used in the sense of ‘floating about’ at the mercy of the wind, like the Ark in the Flood? Compare the following passage from
The Deluge, a poem of the 13th century:—

(The Ark) "luged about

Where the wind and the weder warpen hit wolde."

(Cp. cap and cape.)

347. the uplifted. What is the construction?

348. sultan (or soldan, 764), victor, prince; in 378 'emperor'.

350. brimstone, i.e. 'burning stone': why?

351-55. The Goths, from the province of Dacia, north of the Danube (Danaw), pressed forward by the Huns, settled in the 'Empire' in 376; soon afterwards they defeated the Romans in battle. Forty years later the west Goths sacked Rome, and some passed into Gaul and Spain. German tribes too were at this time crossing the Rhine (Rene), and pressing on into Gaul and Spain.
Hordes of Huns now attacked Romans, Goths, and Germans alike, but were defeated in 451 at Châlons—one of the world's critical battles. Some Germans called Vandals, who had at first settled in Spain, crossed into Africa (Libya) in 429, and founded a kingdom, with Carthage as capital. Even in Italy some east Goths settled.
From these various settlements the Romance nations sprung.

356. squadron, lit. 'that which is squared'. (It. squadrone, L. esquadratum.) Cp. 758, 'squared regiments and bands'.

360. erst, superl. of ere; once, at first.

For throne, cp. 128 and 737 n.

362. rased, for 'erased'. What is the difference? (L. rasum, scraper.

370. Glory—what is the case?

the statues of Caesar are "decked with ceremonies".

358-375. Milton assumes the belief of the early Christian Church that the Pagan gods were fallen angels in disguise. In Par. Reg.
(e.g. II. 121–6) he identifies the fallen angels with the 'demons' of the four elements.

380. promiscuous, mixed, confused.

382. Cp. 1 Peter v. 8, "Your adversary the devil...walketh about, seeking whom he may devour."

383. seat of God, the Temple at Jerusalem.

thundering out of Sion, referring perhaps to what was thundered (the ten commandments, one of which forbad idolatry).
387. Cherubim, two figures in the sanctuary of the Temple.
1 Kings vi. 23.

388. shrines, altars. See 2 Kings xxii. 4, “And he (i.e. King Manasseh) built altars in the house of the Lord.” (G.)

389. abominations: referring to the idolatrous character of the shrines.

390. profaned, defiled, made unholy, desecrated. (L. profanus, unholy; lit. before (or outside of) a temple, fanum.)

392-521. See the Table of Heathen Deities, p. 77.

394. Timbrel, a kind of tambourine.

403. that opprobrious hill, that hill of scandal (416), the offensive mountain (443), all refer to the Mt. of Olives, near Jerusalem opprobrious. (G.)

404, 405. Hinnom was a deep narrow ravine bounding Jerusalem on the south-west. To put an end to the idol worship carried on there—with its human sacrifices—Josiah rendered it ‘ceremonially unclean’ by spreading human bones, &c., in it. Henceforward the refuse of the city was deposited there. By reason of its evil associations the later Jews used its name Ge Hinnom or Gehenna, to denote the place of torment. Tophet was the south-eastern part of the valley. Here, facing the city on the ‘hill of scandal’, Solomon erected his high places to Moloch. (Smith’s Bible Dict.)

406. obscene, foul, repulsive.

414, 415. wanton rites = lustful orgies. The worship of some of the heathen deities was attended with all kinds of wild excesses, drunkenness, &c. (Cp. the account of the offering to Baal in 1 Kings xviii. 28.) wanton, wild, unrestrained. (G.). orgies, originally ceremonies observed in the worship of Bacchus (god of wine), distinguished by furious revelry. (Gk. orgé, fury.) (G.)

417. homicide. (G.)

419. bordering flood, because forming the south or south-west boundary of Canaan. Genesis xv. 18.

423. feminine for ‘female’.

424. soft, pliable, able to take any shape.

424, 425. so soft And uncompounded, &c. Milton regards the Angels as ‘pure intelligential substances’, pure spirit—that is, as beings possessing mental powers of various kinds, but unconnected with a material body.

They require nutriment (Raphael explains to Adam), just as we rational beings do, digesting, assimilating, and turning the material substance into immaterial. See v. 407–8, 438, 497; and vi. 350—

“All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense; and as they please
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, or size
Assume as likes them best, condense or rare”.

NOTES.

424, 425. essence pure, then, is the immaterial angelic substance,—conceived as of the same character throughout (homogeneous), like perfectly pure water, or pure oxygen; uncompounded denotes the absence of composite organs or groups—like the heart, &c., in man—and hence its freedom to take any particular form.

426. manacled, lit. handcuffed: not limited in their movements, size, or shape by joints and limbs. (Manacle, a handcuff, from L.)

429. obscure, dark, shadowy.

430. aery, in or through the air.

435. bestial, refers either to the grossness of their worship, or to below. In Egypt the sacred bulls “maintained...in the great temples of their respective cities were perpetually adored and prayed to by thousands during their lives, and at their deaths were entombed with the utmost care in huge sarcophagi, while all Egypt went into mourning for them” (Rawlinson).

436. Parse bowed and sunk.

438. Astoreth or Ashtoreth (singular form of Ashtaroth), representing the moon, which might be considered the fainter reflection or wife of the sun, and was, as the moon, addressed as ‘queen of heaven’. (Sayce).

439. crescent horns, the horns of the crescent moon.

441. paid their vows and songs: What figure of speech is this?

444. uxorious, referring to his having many wives.

455. See Ezekiel viii. 14, “Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord’s house,...and behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz”.

456. dark, wicked, horrible.

457. alienated, estranged. (L. alienus, strange, foreign.)

458. in earnest, i.e. as compared with the mourning of the Jewish women for Tammuz.

460. grunsel, i.e. groundsill or threshold.

479. abused, deceived and enticed.

480. Fanatic, superstitious, raving. See 435 n. (L. fanaticus, fr. fanum, a temple.)

485. Jeroboam, King of Israel, who rebelled against Rehoboam, set up two golden calves.

486. grazed, fed on grass. (M 46)
487-89. As the Israelites were on the point of leaving Egypt, a plague fell equally on the first-born of the Egyptians and on the animals which they worshipped.

bleating: one of their gods was represented as a ram, another as a goat, but the chief (Apis) as a bull. See Exodus xii. 29.

491. gross, depraved.

495. 1 Samuel ii. 12 and 22.

497-502. In these lines Milton is thought to be referring to the dissolute state of London and of the court after the Restoration.
(See Macaulay, History, i. 360.)

500. injury, wrong, wrong-doing—not 'damage'. (L. injuria; opposed to jus, what is right or lawful.)

502. flown, flushed.

503. Genesis xix.

504. Judges xix. 25.

hospitable door: what is the figure?

508. Javan's issue, i.e. the Greeks, regarded as descended from Javan or Ion, son of Japhet. (Genesis x. 2, Isaiah lxvi. 19.)

509. confessed, worshipped.

510. Titan, see 198 n.

514, 515. Ida, a mountain in Crete, and the birthplace of Zeus.

515, 516. Olympus, the fabled abode of the Greek gods, is a mountain in Thessaly; its highest point is covered with snow most of the year.

middle air. Mr. Verity suggests that in the middle ages the atmosphere was regarded as made up of three regions; and that this 'middle air' is the cold region of clouds and heavy vapours about the mountain tops.

517, 518. Delphi, at the foot of the steep southern slope of Mount Parnassus; Dodona, in Epirus. These were the seats of the two most famous oracles of ancient Greece—of Apollo and Zeus respectively.

520, 521. Vergil and Ovid both speak of Saturn as fleeing alone (over the Hadriatic Sea) before his son Zeus, to Italy, called by the Greeks the Hesperian (or western) fields.

521. the Celtic (fields), the western or Celtic parts of the Continent, especially France.

(to) the utmost isles, probably Britain, &c.

523. damp, depressed. Cp. 'to damp a fire', 'to damp one's spirits'. What is the figure?
NOTES.

524. Obscure, faintly, indistinctly.

525. 526. not lost in loss itself, i.e. in what seemed likely to prove absolute destruction. What is the figure?

527. Like doubtful hue: explain 'doubful'.

528. recollecting, re-collecting, recovering.

529. gently, either without harshness, or gallantly, nobly.

530. fainting: in first edition 'fainted'.

532. clarions, clear-sounding horns. (L. claurus.) (Skeat.)

534. Azazel, probably the name of some evil spirit. The word means 'the solitary one', or 'the scape-goat'. See Leviticus xvi. 8: "And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat" ('Azazel', R.V.).

536. advanced, raised, uplifted. Ensign. (G.)

537. meteor. (G.)

538. golden lustre, lustrous gold.

emblazoned, richly adorned, like a shield. To blazon is to portray armorial bearings on a shield. (M.E. blason, a shield.) Cp. v. 588: "Ensigns high advanced...in their glittering tissue, bear emblazoned holy memorials." The word is an heraldic term.

539. arms, probably the ensign itself; trophies, gems and gold, regarded as symbols of victory.

540. martial, warlike. (L. Mars, Martis, the god of war.)

541. universal, in its Latin sense, whole, entire.

542. concave, hollow roof, or vault.

543. reign, kingdom, realm. Cp. "Pluto's grisly reign", Spenser; and later, Gray's Elegy, "molest her ancient solitary reign".

Chaos, &c., see ii. 890-967, where Night is spoken of as 'eldest of things', and 'eldest Night and Chaos' as ancestors of Nature, because they preside over that out of which 'things' are formed.

546. orient (from L. orius, orientis, the east, the rising sun), constantly used as an epithet of gems. It is frequently used by Milton in the sense of 'bright', 'clear', 'shining'

547. forest huge: what figures?

548. serried (as if) joined or locked together. (F. from L. serere, to join.) This appearance might be caused by the regularity of the lines and the uniform stature of the troops.
550. phalanx. "A body of troops in close array with a long spear as their principal weapon. It was among the Dorians, and especially among the Spartans that this arrangement was most rigidly adhered to." (Smith's Dict. of Antiquities.) to the Dorian mood, i.e. to music of a grave, severe character, supposed to inspire courage and endurance, as distinguished from the Lydian or soothing, tender music (cp. L'Allegro, 139), and trumpet music (540-41). mood. (G.)

551. flutes and soft recorders. The modern flute is of recent German origin: the flute of Milton's day—the English flute—was called a recorder. As he is speaking of Greek music, the expression probably refers in general terms to the so-called flutes of the Greeks, which included reed instruments. They were of various sizes, and the different parts of the harmony—bass, tenor, &c.—could be played on them.

551, 552. 'Such as infused the highest courage and endurance into heroes', &c.

554. breathed, infused, inspired, instilled.

556. mitigate, make soft, mild, less severe. (L. mitis.)

swage (assuage), soothe, soften: lit. to make sweet. (L. suavis.)

"Here let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears: soft stillness and the night Become the touches of sweet harmony".

charmed, in its old sense, denoting the effect of some mysterious power or influence—as here, fascinated by means of music. (L. carmen, a song.)

563. horrid, in its Latin sense, bristling (with spears). Cp. 'Horrid hair', ii. 710.

568. traverse, across, athwart.

569. due, correct, proper, suitable. One of Milton's favourite words.

573. since created man, since the creation of man. A Latin idiom. Cp. 797-98, "After... summons read".

574. embodied force, an army massed.
NOTES.

575. merit (more regard), 'be of more account'.

infantry. In the middle ages, the cavalry were considered as forming the main body of the army; and the two terms 'cavalry' and 'army' were convertible. Cp. chivalry, 307. The foot-men or infantry were deemed little better than rabble (Trench); and probably the word is used in this contemptuous sense here. (Span. and It. infante, a child, a servant, a foot-soldier.)

The reference here is to the Pygmies (cp. 780) a fabulous race whose stature was a 'pugne' (about 13½ in.). They are said by Homer to have been attacked by cranes every spring, and according to the legends they fought on the backs of rams and partridges.

576-79. The Greek gods and heroes.

Phlegra, the westernmost of the three small peninsulas lying to the east of the Gulf of Salonica; the scene of the war between the gods and the giants. See 198.

Thebes and Ilium. 'The heroic race that fought at Thebes and Ilium' symbolizes the great heroes of Greek literature and legendary history.

The story of the exploits of The Seven (Greeks) against Thebes is told by Aeschylus, the story of the Trojan war by Homer.

Troy in N.-W. Asia Minor.

Thebes in Boeotia.

auxiliar gods refers to the part taken by the deities in the siege of Troy. (L. auxilium, help.)

579-81. Legendary British heroes.

Uther's (or Uther Pendragon's) son, i.e. King Arthur, assisted by knights of Britain and of Brittany. For some time (about 1638-39) Milton had thought of taking the Arthurian legends as the subject of his great poem.

582-87. Mediaeval (historical) heroes.

baptized, Christians. infidel, one who does not accept the Christian faith—hence, Moors, Mahomedans, &c.

583, 584. The names in these lines are said by some critics to have been taken by Milton at random; but Mr. Verity holds that each one was carefully selected for its associations with the mediaeval romances of chivalry, by which Milton in his youth had been greatly attracted.

The names are in any case symbolic, like Thebes and Ilium above; at the same time some of them may be connected with particular events.

Aspramont, a castle near Nice. All familiar names in the old romances, and specially associated with tournaments and jousts.

Damasco. Trebisond, a town of great note and splendour in the middle ages.

Damasco was also the scene of several battles in the Crusades.

Montalban, a castle in Languedoc, of note in the wars of Charlemagne.

Marocco, Biserta, associated with the wars between the Christians (Spaniards) and the Moors. From Biserta (the ancient Utica, near Carthage) a Moorish army started to attack the Christians under Charlemagne in Spain; the defeat, however, was inflicted not by the Moors but by the Gascons at Roncesvalles, ‘by Fontarabbia’, near Biarritz. (Charlemagne was not killed in the battle in 778: he lived till 814.)

586. all his peerage, i.e. the brave Roland, the wise Oliver, and all the rest of the twelve peers or paladins of France—except perhaps one.

587. ‘Thus far these surpassed mortals: yet they obeyed’, &c. Explain ‘thus far’.

588. observed, obeyed. Cp. ‘to observe a command’.

592, 593. ‘Nor did it appear less (noble and commanding) than that of an archangel who was now fallen and his excessive brightness dimmed.’

595. horizontal, level, lying towards the horizon.

“When beggars die, there are no comets seen,
   The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes”.

598. Why ‘half the nations’?

599–600. What point is this simile meant to illustrate?

600. Archangel. (G.)

601. Scars of thunder, i.e. made by the lightning.
   intrenched, marked, furrowed, cut into.

603. considerate, meditating (revenge), planning, scheming.

604. ‘His eye was cruel but showed’, &c.

605. Remorse, self-reproach: lit. ‘a biting again’. (L. remordco.)

Passion, suffering, sorrow: not as now, strong feeling only.
NOTES.

606. Were they fellows or followers? See 88 n. and v. 805, &c.

609. amerced, deprived (by way of fine or punishment). (O.F. americer, to fine; from L. mercedem.)

610. 'Yet he beheld how, nevertheless, they stood faithful', &c.

613. scathed, injured, damaged.

614. singed: does lightning merely singe the tops of trees?

615. blasted, withered, blighted, by the lightning. The expression 'blasted heath' occurs in Macbeth i. 3. 77. It is the meeting-place of Macbeth and the witches in the thunder-storm.

618. peers, the chiefs previously mentioned in 391-521.

619. assayed, tried.

thrice, see 30 n.

in spite of scorn, though scorning to weep.

622-26. Cp. the beginning of his first speech, ll. 84-87. Note how much is implied in the phrase, 'but with the Almighty'.

622. myriads. (G.)

624. event, outcome, result.

627. presaging, half-expecting, surmising: lit. foreseeing.

628. 'knowledge (of the) past', &c.

628, 629. could have feared How, 'could have had any fear that such', &c., or 'could have known any reasons for fearing', &c.

632. exile, note the accent. puissant, mighty. legion. (G.)

Hath emptied: what figure? Cp. ii. 692. (Satan "drew after him the third part of Heaven's sons").

633. reascended, re, back (not 'again').

636. counsels different (from those of the rest), 'divided counsels'.

637. lost, destroyed.

638. secure, free from care or misgiving (with regard to his supremacy). Cp. Ben Jonson: "Men may securely sin, but safely never"; and l. 261: "Here we may reign secure".

643, 645. our better part: 'henceforth our safest course is', &c.

646. close, secret. Cp. 795.

647. no less, 'that he may learn from us as we have learnt from him, that he who overcomes', &c.

650, 651. so rife...fame, so general a rumour.

656. eruption, sortie, expedition: lit. ‘outbreak’.

657. infernal: see 241 n.

662. understood—amongst whom?

663. confirm, support, second, ratify.

668. This was the custom of Roman soldiers when applauding a general’s speech. Note the expressiveness of this line through the repetition of the notion of sound in the words clashed, sounding, and din. Cp. 768.

671. the rest entire, ‘the rest being intact’: or else, ‘all the rest’.

the work of sulphur. According to the alchemists, sulphur (understood as a vague ‘principle of fixation’, not the substance we call sulphur) was the chief agent in the formation of metals by its action on ‘earth’, on the ‘seeds of metals’, &c. The phrase work of sulphur refers to the metal either in the earth (as metallic ore) or cropping out (as a sulphide) in flakes on the surface (glossy scurf).

675. brigad. Cp. brigadier. (It. brigata, a troop.)

676. pioners. Pioneers clear the way for an army by making roads, &c. (From O.F. peonier, a foot-soldier; from Low L. pedonem: whence also ‘pawn’ in chess.)

677. camp, army. Cp. xi. 217, ‘a camp of fire’, i.e. ‘chariots and horses of fire’.

678. cast, throw up.

Mammon (Syriac), riches, here used as a proper noun (like Belial, 490).

679. erected, high-minded, upright, noble.

682. Revelation xxi. 21.

683. else goes with aught.

684. vision beatific, a phrase used by early Christian writers to denote the ‘sight of God’, for which they hoped, and which was to give them perfect happiness. Cp. Matthew v. 8.

688. For treasures better hid, i.e. for gold, better left undisturbed.

690. admire, wonder. Cp. ii. 677–78. (L. admirari.)

692. precious, probably used contemptuously; if not, what is the figure in ‘precious bane’? bane, harm.
NOTES.

694. Babel, probably Babylon, noted for its vast walls, its hanging gardens, and the Temple of Belus (720).

Memphian, Egyptian, as in 307, from Memphis, the ancient capital. Egypt was famous for its pyramids and for its temples of Serapis (720). In l. 718 the new city of Memphis is mentioned under the name Alcairo, the modern Cairo. Probably in the latter passage there is a repetition of line 694 under different names. Note that in the second passage Milton uses the more modern names, perhaps to suggest different aspects of the cities. But possibly Babel denotes the tower of Babel, and Memphian may be used in a much wider sense than Alcairo.

697. reprobate, base, depraved, lit. condemned. (L. reprobare.)

698, 699. Herodotus tells us that there were 366,000 men employed for twenty years in the building of the Great Pyramid.

702. Sluiced. A sluice is a sliding gate for regulating the flow of a liquid. (L. exclusa, shut-out.)

704. scummed, skimmed.

bullion refers to the unpurified metal ore. (L. bullio, a mass of metal; from bullire, to boil.)

dross, the impurities in the ore which float on the surface of the molten metal, forming a scum; so that bullion-dross is the scum that comes from the bullion.

706. various, elaborate, intricate; e.g. the frieze and the roof (706-7) would require such mouldings.

708, 709. All the pipes in an organ are supplied with wind from a wind-chest, of which the sound-board forms the upper part; the connecting channels, and the intricate mechanism by which they are controlled, are all hidden away in the depths of the instrument, and yet every single part answers to the easy touch of the player with a sureness and a promptness that make the organ truly magical, and lend far more force to this simile than might appear at first sight. Milton was very fond of the organ, and had one in his house.

710. Anon, presently.

711. Exhalation, a vapour or mist, suggestive of silence and ease. (L., lit. what is breathed out.) Cp. Tennyson—

"Like that strange song I heard Apollo sing, While Ilion like a mist rose into towers".

712. dulcet symphonies, sweet accompanying chords or strains (on instruments).
1. like a temple. In Greece and in Asia Minor there were many temples, mostly Doric, and their rows of pillars formed a conspicuous feature.

13. pilasters, square pillars partly sunk in a wall.

14. Doric pillars, round pillars of a massive, simple style, with plain capital. Cp. note on 'Dorian mood', 55. (The other two orders of pillars are Ionic—fluted, with voluted capitals; and Corinthian—lighter columns, with highly ornamented capitals.)

15. Architrave. The beam or stone-work which rests immediately on the top of a row of pillars; above it is an ornament called the frieze, and above that a projecting part called the cornice. Architrave means chief beam. (Gk. arche, and L. trahs.)

16. bossy, standing out prominently. (F. bosse, a knob.)

17. fretted, ornamented—properly with interlaced bars, like gratings. (O.F. frete. It. ferata, an iron-grating.)

17-20. See 694 n.

24, 25. 'Reveal, within, her wide and ample spaces', &c.

27. pendent, hung. (L. pendeo.) magic. (G.)

28. A cresset was a lamp consisting of a small, open, iron cage or vessel, in which was placed rope or tow steeped in pitch, &c. It was usually carried hanging from the top of a pole. (Fr. creuset, a pot; whence 'cruse' and 'cruet'.)

29. naphtha, a liquid distilled from petroleum; used for the lamps.

30. asphaltus, pitch; used for the cressets.

31. Explain hasty.

37. In the middle ages it was supposed that the angels were of two kinds, Cherubim and Seraphim, or angels of light and angels of love, divided into three groups or Hierarchies, each consisting of three Orders. (Gk. hierarches, a ruler in sacred matters, a chief priest: cp. monarch.)

39. Ausonian land, Italy: from Ausonia, an ancient name for central Italy.

40. Mulciber, the softener, the metal-founder. (L. mulcere, to soften.) Another name for Vulcan, the Roman god of fire. In Greece he was called Hephhestus. He was smith and armurer to the gods of Olympus, and was represented as lame.

41. Why fabled? See 747, &c.

45. zenith, the highest point in the heavens over one's head. See also p. 20. What is the opposite point called?
NOTES.

746. Hence this island was sacred to Hephæstus, and here he had his forge!

747. rout, crowd, rabble (distinct from rout = defeat; from L. repta).

750. engines, contrivances, ingenuity. (L. ingenium, skill, ingenuity.) Cp. Ben Jonson: "Sejanus worketh with all his ingine".

753. sovran. See 246 n.

aweful, awe-inspiring.

756. Pandemonium, the palace (or temple) 'of all the demons'. Cp. Pantheon, a Roman temple to all the gods.

758. squared regiment. Cp. 'perfect phalanx' (550), and 'squadron' (356).

761. access, note the meaning and accent.

764. wont, were accustomed. Past tense of A. S. wunian, to be accustomed.

765. Panim, belonging to a Pagan or heathen country.

766. career, the galloping of the combatants towards one another along the course. Note the two kinds of combat referred to; in the second the points of the lances were blunted. (F. carrière, a road, a horse race.)

768. What is there remarkable about this line? What does it suggest?

the hiss of wings, hissing wings. What is the figure?

769. In April the Sun traverses that part of the sky in which the constellation Taurus is situated.

771. fresh dews and flowers, i.e. fresh dewy flowers. So in v. 212: "Among sweet dews and flowers". What is the figure?

773. citadel, a little city—not a fort here. (Dim. of Italian cittade, or città, a city.)

774. balm, balsam; used by Milton of any fragrant resin or gum. expatiate, spread out. (L. spatior, walk abroad.) confer, discuss.

776. straitened, crowded close together for want of space. (Streit = narrow.)

780. pygmean race. See 575 n.
Indian mount, the Himalayas.

belated, kept late. Cp. benighted, overtaken by the fall of night.

arbitress, witness, spectator. (L. arbiter, umpire, witness.)

nearer to the earth. Fairies, witches, &c., were supposed to be able to draw the moon down towards the earth by their enchantments.

pale. What does this word qualify? What is the figure? Cp. Il Penseroso, 67-69, where Milton speaks of the moon "wandering as if led astray".

close: cp. 646.

recess, retirement, or, a retired place.

conclave, assembly. This is the name specially applied to the secret meeting of cardinals at Rome when a pope is to be elected. (G.)

frequent, numerous, crowded (L. frequens); qualifying conclave.

consult, consultation. (L. consultum, a consultation or decree, especially of the senate or chief council.)

DEFINITIONS, WITH EXAMPLES,

OF THE CHIEF FIGURES OF SPEECH OCCURRING IN BOOK 1.

1. ALLITERRATION: the rhythmical repetition of a sound in poetry.
   "Deep in a dungeon was the captive cast,
   Deprived of day and held in fetters fast." Dryden.
   See l. 768.

2. ANAKOLOU'THON, or non-sequence: a sudden change in the form of a passage. See lines 84, 623, &c.

3. ANTITHESIS: the contrasting of opposite notions. (Cp. No. 12.)
   "From toil he wins his spirit's light,
   From busy day the peaceful night." Gray.

4. CHIA'SMUS: arranging corresponding terms symmetrically, or cross-wise, like the letter X. (Gk. 'chi'.)
   \begin{align*}
   \text{Shallow brooks and rivers wide.} \\
   \text{shallow} & \quad \text{brooks} \\
   \text{rivers} & \quad \text{wide} \\ \end{align*}

5. EUPHEMISM: the use of a pleasant or mild term instead of one that is disagreeable or strong. See lines 623 and 624.
   Irony is one form of this. See 318.

6. HENDI'ADYS: the use of two nouns instead of a noun and an adjective. (Gk. 'one thing through two'.)
   "Among sweet dews and flowers." Milton.
   \(i.e\). sweet dewy flowers.
7. Hypallage: transferring an adjective to a word to which it does not properly refer. (Gk. 'an interchange'.) E.g. 'The wisest heart of Solomon' (l. 400). A special case of Hypallage is prolepsis—the use of a word by anticipation.

8. Hyperbole: exaggeration. (Gk. 'a throwing beyond the mark'.) See ll. 633, and 655-56.

9. Metaphor: a transference of qualities or actions from one thing to another.

   See l. 294. (Milton is very sparing in the use of metaphor, but he excels in his use of simile.)

10. Metonymy: naming a thing by some accompaniment or connection. (Gk. 'a change of name'.) (Cp. No. 17.)

   "The pen is mightier than the sword."

   "I am reading Milton."

11. Onomatopoeia: imitating the sense by the sound of the words used.

   "The deep-domed Empyrean Rings to the roar of an angel-onset." Tennyson.

   And "The brooks of Eden mazily murmuring". Tennyson.

   Cp. ll. 668 and 768.

12. Oxymoron: placing together words of opposed meanings. (Cp. No. 3.) (Gk. 'an apparent contradiction'.)

   See ll. 63 and 692.

13. Paronomasia: placing together words of similar sound. See ll. 606 and 642.

14. Personification: attributing to inanimate objects qualities or actions peculiar to living beings. See ll. 490 ('Bclial'), 601-2, 574-75, &c.

15. Pleonasm: the use of superfluous words. (Gk. 'fulness'.)

   "Encompassed round with foes." Milton.

   See ll. 2-3, 13-14, 281, &c.

16. Simile: a comparison, usually limited to one point. See ll. 302, 591, 745; &c.

17. Synecdoche: putting the name of a part for that of the whole, of the material for the complete thing, &c. (Cp. No. 10.)

   See ll. 519, 563, 739, &c.

18. Zeugma: the construction in which two (or more) words depend on another word which suits only one of them, but suggests an appropriate word for the other. (Gk. 'a yoking together'.)

   "To the silvan lodge they came,
   With flowerets decked and fragrant smells." Milton.
Of the above, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 11, and 13 are mere mechanical devices, not figures of speech, though, for convenience, usually included under this term.

19. DOUBLETS: words differing in form, but etymologically one and the same. E.g. benison and benediction; extraneous and strange; paralysis and palsy.

20. HOMONYMS: words which are spelt alike, but differ considerably in meaning. E.g. spell, an incantation, a thin slip of wood, a turn of work, to tell the names of letters. So beetle, lay, &c.

21. SYNONYMS: words having nearly the same meaning. E.g. Begin and commence; idle and lazy; slothful and indolent.

22. HYBRID: a word that is made up from two (or more) different languages: as bankrupt—bank being a Teutonic word, whilst -rupt is from the Latin. Cp. interwove, architrave, &c.

EXTRA NOTES, MOSTLY ETYMOLOGICAL.

ambitious (41), aspiring: originally, ambitio was the going about of candidates for office at Rome seeking votes; canvassing. (L. ambi, and iter, to go.)

Archangel (600), lit. chief angel or messenger. (Gk.) Cp. architect (732), chief builder.

conclave (795), originally a locked-up place. (L. clavis, a key.)

disastrous (597), unfavourable. In the language of Astrology, a disaster was due to the stars. (Gk. astron, a star.) So 'influence', denoted the power which stars exerted over human affairs, 'that which flowed upon us'. A jovial person was 'born under' Jove, and was therefore of a cheerful disposition.

ensign (536), a standard. (L. insignis, remarkable; from in, and signum, a mark: hence 'having a mark on it'. Skeat.)

entrance (301), to put into a trance or swoon, to cause to become unconscious. (L. transitus, a passing away or across.)

homicide (417), deadly, murderous. (L. homo, and caedo, kill: cp. fratricide, &c.)

magic (727), lit. the science of the magi, wise men who interpreted dreams among the Persians.

meteor (537), a conspicuous fiery body in the sky. (Gk. 'something raised aloft'.)

mood (in Dorian Mood, 550), denotes the character of the music—grave, soothing, stirring, &c., and this depended mainly on (M 46)
the arrangement of the intervals. We now use the term mode (as ‘minor mode’).

myriad (622), ‘ten thousand’. (Gk.)

opprobrious (403), full of reproach. (L. opprobrium, disgrace.)

oracle (12), a divine utterance; here the place where such utterances are delivered.

orgies (415), wild revelry and excesses. (L. orgia, a festival in honour of Bacchus: Gk. orgê, wild emotion or passion.)

rhime (16), verse or poetry; from the numerical regularity of the lines. A.S. rim, number. Hence the correct form is rime: the intrusion of the letter h is due to confusion with rhythm.

shrine (388), altar: also a costly elaborate temp; or a place where relics are deposited. (L. scrinium, a chest.)

wanton (414), unrestrained, wild. (O.E. wan, lacking, and tehn, draw, educate.)

"This volume is written chiefly for teachers, as it deals with the training of children during the period of school life, but interested and intelligent parents will find it helpful in its acts and recommendations. All true students of childhood will welcome the book. Nearly all the works on child study have been written by educators interested in physiological psychology; Dr. Warner is an eminent physician interested in psychological physiology.   Dr. Warner's new book will do great service by revealing to teachers their responsibility for brain training and nerve coordination. The culture of the mind, and the improvement of the methods by which culture may be communicated and acquired, are not the highest functions of the teacher. The new education includes methods for the development of brain cells, for the perfect co-ordination of the sensor and motor brain, and the extension of nerve connections throughout the body. By these methods the race may be made executive and operative, and thus each individual will become a positive agent in a progressive civilization. This is the true educational ideal."—From the Introduction by Inspector James L. Hughes.

MODERN METHODS IN EDUCATION

A Modern English Grammar

By HUBER GRAY BUEHLER

This book is an attempt to present the grammar of modern English in the manner prescribed by modern methods of instruction; and the method adopted cannot fail to commend itself to all progressive teachers as the simplest, most natural, and most conducive to interest in what is apt to be considered the driest of all educational subjects.

PRICE, 75 CENTS

Copies for examination mailed free on receipt of 40 cents.

This new series, prepared by accomplished scholars of great practical experience in teaching, is distinguished by several important features for the first time introduced into Canadian text-books.

Scope.—Each volume is complete in itself, containing biographical, historical, and (where suitable) critical introduction, text, notes, appendices, specimen translations and hints on translation, English exercises for retranslation, and vocabularies.

Introduction.—The great aim is to make the introductions thoroughly readable and interesting.

Illustrations.—The illustrations are mainly authentic drawings from coins, gems, statues, and other objects of ancient art. They are of real value as familiarizing the pupil with results of archaeological research. Maps and plans are provided.

Notes.—The notes, besides explaining simply all difficulties in style or allusion, aim at interesting the pupil in the subject matter.

Appendices.—Textual and other criticism beyond the attainments of the average pupil, but useful to the master, is given in appendices.

Translations.—Wherever standard literary translations are available, a specimen is given; this is especially serviceable in the case of poets. In other cases hints on translation are given.

Retranslation Exercises.—Each of the prose books contains exercises for retranslation, carefully compiled so as to prac the pupil in the vocabulary and the constructions of the text.

Vocabulary.—Each volume has a complete vocabulary.

Price.—Each volume is sold at the unprecedented low price of 35 cents.
